Employability Skills

Module 11 - Customer Service

Customer

A customer is a person or organization that purchases goods or services from a business in exchange for money. Customers are the reason businesses exist, because without customers, there would be no sales, and therefore, no revenue.

Customer Service
[ˈkʌstəˈmər ˈsɜːvɪs]
The practice of providing existing and potential customers with support to enhance their satisfaction with the company and its products or services.

Customer Service

Customer service is the help and support a business provides to its customers, both before and after they buy or use a product or service. It involves things like answering questions, resolving issues, and generally making sure customers have a positive experience.

Why we need Customer Service?

Customer needs encompass the factors, requirements, and expectations that define a positive customer experience from the customer's perspective. Understanding and fulfilling these needs effectively is key to delivering exceptional service and building customer loyalty

Customer Service

Analyzing Different Types and Needs of Customers

Analyzing different types and needs of customers is essential for any business that wants to grow, stay competitive, and keep its customers satisfied.

Every customer is unique – with different preferences, expectations, and behaviors – and understanding these differences helps a business make smarter decisions.

Why is Customer Analysis Important?

Better Products and Services

- By knowing what different customers want, businesses can design or improve products to meet those specific needs.
- Example: A sportswear brand may design different shoes for runners, hikers, and gym-goers based on feedback and demand.

Personalized Marketing

- Different customer types respond to different marketing messages.
- Example: Younger customers may prefer social media ads, while older customers might respond better to email or phone.

Customer Retention

- Analyzing loyal vs. one-time customers helps a business develop strategies to retain existing customers, which is often cheaper than finding new ones.
